HELI (the Turkish Traveller) to the invincible Vizier Azem.

MOST magnificent Lord! Representative of Majesty! and Delegate of Power! presuming on our long and intimate Acquaintance, I venture to continue my Correspondence with thee, tho' the Hand of the sublime Sultan has rais'd thee to be the Support of the Ottoman Throne; I am well assur'd thou wast before as truly and intrinsically great in thy own Virtues, as thou art now in giving Laws to the Nations. I approach thee with Reverence, in profound Regard to thy State, but I salute thee with Pleasure, as a Man soften'd by Humanity, and familiar with the Graces: Thy Predecessor was a Man of many noble Qualifications, but he wanted as many more; thou art all he was, and all he wanted: Neither could a Less than thou be felt in the Seat of Empire. When Faction and Discontent prevail in the Bowels of a Society, none but a Genius like thine can pacify the Rage, and restore the Body politique to its natural State: But thou must expect to meet with Opposition from thy Enemies, and Ingratitude from thy Friends; to be approv'd by few, to be condemn'd by many, and envy'd by all; the Abilities of thy publick Capacity, the Amiableness of thy private Life, will not protect thee; Calumny is deaf, and Prejudice blind, Falshood misrepresents, and Slander defames; no one in thy Station has ever escap'd either; they are the necessary Consequents of Greatness and Virtue. Trace the Records of Time to their Fountain-Head, and look forward into Futurity till Time shall be no more: Both Ways the Prospect is the same; nay should our holy Prophet himself revisit the World again, and take up the Reins of Government for a Season, we might be pleas'd with him at first, but, afterwards, we should hate, or despise him, and wish a Remove in Favour of the veriest Reptile that had lick'd the Dust from his Sandals: 'Tis natural to Mankind to make themselves miserable by their own Vices, and then charge their Misfortunes on their Superiors; were there a Change of Government they flatter themselves they should soon be happy, all their Difficulties would be remov'd at once, and Peace and Plenty succeed to Want and Calamity; thou hast been a Witness to their Repinings under former Ministries; are they easy under thine? Has any one Benefit resulted to the Empire from Patrona's Faction, but thy Advancement? I am afraid of thy Reply; I am too well acquainted with Humane Nature to expect its Reformation, and yet there is not a Creature so meanly wretched but thinks himself qualified to correct the ablest Politician, and furnish out Schemes of Wisdom to the wisest Philosophers. 'Tis to this insolent Self-Conceit the late Insurrection is owing—P—was a Man of a turbulent and unquiet Disposition; little Knowledge, and abundance of Pride: He thought the State of Life he was born in inferior to his Merit, and resolv'd to exalt himself by his Ambition; he took Advantage of the Prejudices of the People, and instil'd the Venom of Disaffection, as a salutary Medicine; their Passions corresponded with his, and what he taught they believ'd: His first Pretence was only to purge the Ministry, but afterwards he dethron'd his Prince; at first he refus'd Preferment when 'twas offer'd, but afterwards assum'd it as his Right; pretended to serve the new Monarch, but in Reality controll'd him; the publick Spiritedness of the Patriot, ended in the Rapaciousness of the Tyrant; from Intreaty he proceeded to Command, and the Pride that prompted him to aspire to Power, impell'd him to abuse it: Such was the Change of this Patriot, with a Change of Circumstance, or, rather, such was his uniform Character; stifling one Passion in Favour of another, acquiring Authority by Violence and Hypocrisy, and exerting it with Rapine and Cruelty.—Accomplish'd Minister! I write not these Things to thee as Information; the Compass of thy Knowledge extends beyond my Discernment, neither will my Stock of Science afford thee one new Idea: Thou art deeply read in the Maxims of Politicks, and perfectly well acquainted with the Elements of Faction: But suffer me to complain to thee of what I feel, and expatiate on the ill Consequences that infallibly result from false Patriotism, and unreasonable Oppositions.

The Misery of a divided State can never be better explain'd than by Facts; I am sorry that the Mussulmans should at present be so fatal a Proof; I am griev'd to see our foreign Affairs distress'd by our intestine Divisions, to see the Children of the Faithful conspiring with their Enemies against their Country; to see Names and Distinctions handed down to Posterity, to keep alive the Embers of Discontent, and intail Sedition on future Ages: Neither is this Apprehension in the least chimerical, or absurd; such Mischiefs have ever been the Consequence of mistaken Popularity.——Whoever first broaches Disloyalty among a People, is accountable for all the Evils that are inseparable from it, and I dare be confident that scarce one Revolution in History took Place, without doing more Injuries than it complain'd of, or cur'd.——From whence 'tis plain that it can never be lawful, or fit to oppose any establish'd Government, till it has proceeded to Extremities with the People; neither should any Man attempt it then, that had any one self-interested View to gratify, any Thought of Power, Riches, or Grandeur to indulge: No one can be a true Patriot who has any Concern for himself, but as a Member of the general Body; he ought to be wise, cautious, prudent, moderate, afraid of Violence, and a Friend to Peace; a Lover of Justice, and rather the Advocate than the Champion of the Cause he defended.——The Character of P—— was directly contrary to this, and all the Designs of his Cabal as mercenary as his own.——I congratulate thee on thy late Triumph over the Enemies of thy Country: Thou hast done Justice to thy Royal Master, and Honour to thyself; under thy mild Administration the Mussulmans will be happy; if they are not sensible of it, let their own Folly be their Punishment; thy Virtue will always be thy Companion, and thy Integrity do that Justice which they deny.——The Wisdom of the Ottoman Princes will shine from the Throne upon thee, and be at once thy Safety, and thy Praise.——While thy Merit recommends thee to the Smiles of thy Sovereign, thou art secure from the Malice of thy Enemies, and, while thy Merit continues, their Opposition will only serve to increase thy Glory, and make thee dearer to Men of Genius and Impartiality than ever.——Thy Situation, illustrious Statesman! is greatly preferable to that of the Ministers in this Nation of Nazarenes; however faithful they have been to their Prince, however indulgent to the People, they are sure to struggle with a continued Faction, and be oppos'd in their most laudable Designs; to be made the Subject of weekly Libels, and ridiculously expos'd for the Entertainment of the People.——Like Sultan Sampson among the Hebrews they are led out to make them Sport; but the present Vizier is too generous to pull down the Constitution, to be aveng'd on his Enemies.——

The English are certainly the most fantastical People that walk upright on the Earth; they are not satisfied with being free, they would have their Governors Slaves; they do their utmost to effect it, and those, who are wise enough to oppose it for the Sake of the whole Community, are treated as publick Enemies; not considering that their Freedom is intirely owing to the Equality of the Parts of which their Government is formed, and that, to aggrandize any one at the Expence of the rest, is to overturn the Harmony of the whole.——The Spirit of Discord has taken up his Habitation among them, and, whatever Excursions he may make elsewhere, he certainly returns hither again, as a Traveller returns to his native Air, or an Exile that had long been a Stranger to his Home.——The ever adorable Alla preserve thee! magnificent Bashaw, from the Caprice of a wanton and variable People; to be their Idol is to live in Misery, because they are sure to change, and their Hatred is always equal to their Admiration.——I kiss the Hem of thy Robe with most profound Respect, and pray thy Felicity may be equal to thy Virtue.

Conclusion of the Tale of Constant and Fidelia, or Virtue rewarded.

AS soon as the old Baronet had taken Possession of the beautiful Fidelia, he hurried away to a Country-Seat of his by the Sea-side, as he pretended, to enjoy the Remainder of the Season, but, in Fact, to compliment his own Jealousy, and secure her even from the Admiration she could never avoid.—Having long been conversant with the worst of Women, he could not prevail on himself to confide in the Best; the Experience of her Virtue was no Security to him; he had the Talent of reasoning himself into Suspicion, and was industrious to give himself Torment: He compar'd the Bloom of her Years with the Infirmities of his own, and what made him infinitely fond, gave him infinite Pain: He imagin'd she only wanted, or waited for an Opportunity to abuse him, fancied her Gallant was always in Disguise before him, and never slept but he dreamt of a Discovery that wak'd him with Horror.—Such was the Circumstance of this unhappy Man, fearing future Misery he could not enjoy his present Happiness, and what was the Source of his Pleasure, was the Parent of his Pain.——Fidelia could not be ignorant of the Wretchedness she was oblig'd to share, but she thought it prudent to over-look, what she thought impossible to cure; she bore his Peevishness with Patience, and endur'd his Fondness without the least Appearance of Distaste: She thought it her Duty to treat him with the utmost Tenderness and Humanity, to take Pity on his Frailty, and do her Endeavour to preserve his Peace: She confin'd herself wholly to his Company, studied his Humour, and obey'd his Will, without the least Murmur or Delay.——She even set a Guard upon her Eyes, as well as her Words and Actions, and would not suffer a heedless Glance to wander, that might in the least aggravate his Misfortune.——Yet when she was intirely alone, and had Leisure to consult her own Heart, she could not help repining at her Situation, and believing that Providence had fitted her for a more delicate Society, something more amiably tender than the utmost Pomp her present Life could bestow; this Thought naturally recall'd the Idea of her dear Constant, and a Fear of unextinguish'd Passion and unabated Sorrow ever wail'd on the melancholy Remembrance.

About a Year after this unhappy Marriage, the Husband, who had pin'd for Want even in Possession, fell into a languishing Illness, that consum'd him daily; Jealousy had been made the Instrument of Death, and laid its Hand upon his Heart: Fidelia was allarm'd at his Danger, and applied herself, with the utmost Assiduity, to heal both his Body and Mind: She was never from his Bed-side, she spent the Night and Day in Watchings; Nature had hardly Time to relieve itself, and nothing seem'd of any Consequence to her but his Welfare.——During this Interval, a prodigious Storm happen'd upon the Coast, and the Sea, which was the Prospect from their Villa, beat with uncommon Fury upon the Shoar. Fidelia, who could never behold such a Scene without lamenting the Fate of her Lover, cast her Eye towards it with Sorrow for her own Calamity, and Pity for those who were liable to the same Misery. Perhaps (says she) another Constant may perish in this Storm, and another Fidelia survive, like me, to bewail him for ever. She had scarce spoke, when she discover'd a Ship in the utmost Distress, driving before the Wind, disabled in the Tempest, and hurrying precipitately on the Rocks, that were sure to be its Ruin: In another Moment, she saw it strike, and beat to Pieces with the Violence of the Waves; she gave a loud Scream of Sympathy at the horrible Prospect, immediately sent out all her Domesticks to endeavour to save the Wretches that were abandon'd to the merciless Ocean, and waited with Impatience for the Consequence.——Not long after they return'd with one they had sav'd from the Numbers that were wreck'd; he had drove ashore on the Fragment of a Mast, was hardly yet recover'd to Sensibility, and was greatly bruis'd by the Rocks he had been stranded on. Fidelia melting with Compassion at the miserable Spectacle, order'd him immediately to Bed, and that he should be attended with all the Care and Humanity that his Circumstances requir'd.——The Stranger was now sufficiently reviv'd to understand into what hospitable Hands he was fallen, but behav'd in so despairing a Manner as if he hardly thought his Escape a Favour. "Madam (says he) don't be sollicitous for a Life "that is not worth preserving! 'twould have been better "the Deep had destroy'd me, than that I should only sur"vive to be miserable: I am the Sport of Fortune, and "the Prey of Calamity. Had I died I had been at Peace, "to live and suffer are the same.——Pardon me, Madam, "if I seem to be insensible of your Goodness, I am sorry "'tis thrown away on one so unhappy who can neither "feel or return it as it deserves."—Fidelia heard him with most profound Attention, and felt a Concern for him which she knew not how to apply, or explain; she fancied she knew him, yet was at a Loss to determine where, or when; but, believing Rest and Ease would restore him more to himself, she deferr'd her own Satisfaction till his Recovery.——This did not require much Time; being diligently attended, and having Youth for his Friend, he was soon able to walk about his Chamber, and he as soon thought it his Duty to thank his Deliverer; she was with her Husband, who alter'd daily for the worse, when he sent to beg that Favour, and she, who had an unusual Curiosity to be inform'd of his Fortunes, took an immediate Opportunity to oblige him.——Their Meeting was in an Anticham-ber adjoining to the Knight's Apartment, and his own; and tho' the Stranger confess'd his Obligation in the most grateful and sincere Manner, Fidelia easily observ'd the same Weight hung upon his Spirits as before, and the farther he was from dying the more miserable he esteem'd himself; at which, resolving to make his Behaviour the Means of receiving the desir'd Intelligence, she put him on an Explanation of the Misfortunes he seem'd so fond to be deliver'd from.——Madam (says he) I must in Gratitude obey you, but every Circumstance is so sadden'd with Sorrow, that 'twould be Mercy to spare me the Recollection, if 'twas possible to forbear it at any Time.——My Fondness for a Lady of inimitable Virtues, and Accomplishments, ruin'd me with my Father betimes, but the Satisfaction of being lov'd by her was of infinitely greater Value. My dear Fidelia was my only Happiness, and yet I left her in Persuit of that Fortune, which I vainly thought necessary to our mutual Repose: But I was effectually punish'd for my Mistake; I had not left her above a Month, before I was taken by the Algerines, and with my Liberty, lost every Prospect of seeing her any more: What I suffer'd in Slavery was nothing comparable to the Pain of that Reflection, and I thought 'twas better to die than endure it.—— When I had made this Conclusion I resolv'd at least to attempt my Liberty; if I succeeded I promis'd myself Fidelia as a Reward; if not, Death would be the End of all my Woes.——Accordingly I made a Combination with some other Slaves, and one Night we procur'd an open Boat, and, favour'd by the Darkness, put out to Sea in Quest of some Maltese Gallies, who were cruizing on the Coast; with the Morning 'twas our good Fortune to meet with them, were taken on board, and kindly landed in Spain, where I renew'd the Persuit of my first Design, and resolv'd to compliment my Fidelia with the Riches she deserv'd. For this End, I embark'd myself for the Indies; and, by a Series of Success, gather'd together as ample an Estate as my Ambition desir'd.——Now my Heart flatter'd itself with a long uninterrupted Scene of Happiness with the charming Fidelia; I hir'd a Ship, embark'd my Treasures, and call'd upon every favourable Wind to prosper my Voyage; every favourable Wind seem'd to wait upon my Wish, but 'twas all Flattery, they only suspended their Rage till I was nearer Enjoyment, that my Disappointment might be the greater; the Sea has swallow'd up all the Product of my Toils, and my Fidelia will be as unhappy as ever.——'Tis not easy to conceive Fidelia's Sentiments on this unexpected Discovery; she wanted but little of dying away with the Surprize, but, calling all her Resolution to her Assistance, she endeavour'd to conceal the violent Agitations of her Heart, till his Tale was over, and then pretended a sudden Indisposition as an Excuse to withdraw,——Alone, she had Leisure to ruminate on her own Unhappiness, and Constant's invariable Virtue; she accus'd herself of Inconstancy and Ungratitude, and compar'd it with his Passion and Fidelity; she reflected on the Pain of his imaginary Loss, when 'twas in her Power to make him happy, and admir'd the Oddness of her Destiny that had reserv'd him, when 'twas a Sin against her Duty to think of him at all: She was tempted by Love to make use of the present Minute to make herself known to him, to weep over his Woes, and confess the unabated Fondness of her Inclinations: But Honour sternly interpos'd, and she prudently resolv'd never to see him more, for Fear she should be unequal to the mighty Temptation.——

In the Midst of this Agony of Thought, she was call'd to receive her Husband's last Embraces; he died in her Arms, perfectly convinc'd of her Virtue, and repenting sincerely of the Jealousy that had render'd them both unhappy. To make her Amends he left her sole Heiress to his immense Estate, and purchas'd the Peace of his dying Moments, on the Terms of establishing her future Happiness.——Fidelia lamented him, as she ought, with a decent Sorrow, and paid the utmost Honours to his Dust; but then her Thoughts return'd to the unhappy Constant, and she thought herself oblig'd to put a Period to his Woes. ——He was the first Person that was admitted, after she put on her Weeds, and she receiv'd him with an immediate Offer of her Person and her Fortune, as the last Tryal of his Integrity.——" I was struck, says she, with the Story " of your Calamities, and became desirous to relieve them; " my present Circumstances have put it amply in my Power, " and I am only pleas'd with Riches because they may be " serviceable to you.——Think no more of your Fidelia, " you have already sacrific'd too much to so fatal a Passion, " and what you lose in her let it be my Happiness to sup- " ply."——Constant was cover'd with Confusion at the Proposal, and nobly declin'd a Blessing he was incapable to enjoy; protested an eternal Fondness for Fidelia, and that nothing could be an Equivalent for her; pleaded a Delicacy in not presenting her a Heart that was already devoted to another, and begg'd her to believe it not worthy of the Favour.—" Yes! my dear Constant, (replies she throwing " herself into his Arms) 'tis worthy all that Providence can " bestow; I am your Fidelia that you have suffer'd so " much to serve, and I am destin'd to reward your Virtue. " Adieu to Woe and Misery for the future; Joy and Plea- " sure court our Indulgence, and 'tis high Time they were " obey'd."——There is no Need to continue the Tale any farther, our own Hearts will best imagine the rest.

We have receiv'd the Letter from Moromastix, but were oblig'd to postpone the Publication of it till next Week, on Account of the Conclusion of this Tale, which we had promis'd before.

SATURDAY, September 25.

UPON the Removal of the Court to St. James's, his Royal Highness Prince William is to have a Houshold established for himself, which is to consist of two Gentlemen of the Bed Chamber, a Master of the Robes, two Grooms of the Bed-chamber, three Pages of the Bed-Chamber, four Gentlemen-Ushers, a Treasurer and Receiver General, a Principal Secretary, a Master of the Horse, two Equerries, two Pages of Honour, and such other Officers and Servants as will make the same compleat.

On Thursday Morning last, a Blacksmith at Gravesend, having some Disputes with his Wife, took up a Pistol and discharg'd it at her; the Bullet enter'd into her right Breast, and lodg'd in the left.

By the Bonita, Capt. West, we have the following Account. Some small Time before the said Ship left Buenos Ayres, the House of Mr. Thistlethwaite late one of the Factors of the South Sea Company there, was attempted in the following Manner. The House being defended by Canes stuck in the Ground, and within Doors guarded by one Millet, a Sailor, (one of those saved out of the Seahorse, Capt. Moor White, some Time ago lost near the Mouth of the River Plate) two Persons in Disguise, armed with Pistols, broke in. One of them presented a Pistol to the Head of Millet, calling him by his Name, and swearing that if he spoke one Word, he would shoot him dead: Upon which, Millet went to put it by with his Hand; but the Assailant snapp'd it, but it not going off, Millet took a Knife out of his Side-Pocket, and stuck it in the Groin and Shoulder of his Adversary, who finding himself wounded, fled out of the Room. Then Millet attacking the other, he also fled, and for that Time got off; upon which, Millet alarming the rest in the House, they heard the faint Expressions of a dying Man calling out for a Confessor; when going to the Place, they there found a Spaniard of some Note just dead; and by the Wounds which were fresh bleeding, found him to be the same Person who attempted to shoot Millet. This being noised about, the other was by some proper Hints discovered; and when taken, would not confess their Intention of so desperate an Undertaking; but it is supposed their Design was either to rifle the House, imagining a large Sum of Money was contained there, or to seize the Books belonging to the Trade of the South-Sea Company at that Factory.

N. B. Mr. Thistlethwaite being very subject to the Flux, and in a weak State of Health, from Dinner-time keeps open House for all Gentlemen, as well English as Spaniards, who are sure of meeting with a hearty Welcome: Therefore an Attempt of this Nature seems to be the more shocking.

Robbery. A few Nights ago the Timber-Yard belonging to Justice Meard, in Milk-Alley, Westminster, was broke open, and robb'd of Goods to a considerable Value.

One Soldier, who for many Years receiv'd Alms from Kensington Parish, and but two or three Days before she died, went about complaining of great Want, which induced the Curate of that Parish to gather Charity for her better Subsistence during her Indisposition, and to bring her 7*s.* but when she found herself near her End, she remembred her Opulency, made a Will, and bequeath'd to Mr. Penford of that Town 500l.

Robberies. On Saturday Night Mr. Armstrong was robb'd by two Foot-pads in the Vinegar-Field near Shoreditch, of a Silver Watch and 17*s.*——On Friday last in the Evening a Cooper belonging to Mr. Harvest a Brewer at Kingston upon Thames, was attacked by two Foot-pads as he was going home; they took from him some Silver and beat him severely.——On Saturday Morning last one of the Cambridge Coaches was robb'd near Newington; there were but two Passengers in it. The Highwaymen not only took away their Money but their Bundles, and whatever else they could find ——Yesterday Morning at Six o'Clock two Highwaymen robb'd a Gentleman's Coach, between Conyhatch and Highgate, of above 33l.——Last Saturday Night a Gentleman was knock'd down and robb'd near the Mewse Gate, Charing-Cross, by two Street-Robbers: They took from him his Hat, Peruke, Cane, Sword, and some Silver.——The same Morning two Footmen belonging to one of the Maids of Honour, were attacked between Hampton-Court and Hampton-Town, by two Foot-pads, and one of them was robb'd of 24*s.*

Last Sunday an unfortunate Accident happen'd at Thames-Ditton in Surrey, where a Waterman's Boy of Kingston going there to see a Relation, one of the Children belonging to the House where he went shew'd him an old rusty Trooper's Sword, which he immediately took down, and fencing with the other Child who had a Piece of Stick, he chopped him upon the upper Part of the Shoulder with the Sword, and cut him so terribly, that the Child immediately fell into a Fever, and died Yesterday Morning.

The Galleons under the Command of the General Don Manuel Lopez Pintado, consisting of four Men of War and 12 Merchant Ships, sailed from the Havanna for Europe nine Days before the Departure of the Don Carlos; and on the 24th of August, in Company with the S. George, having lost Company of the Hannibal the 22d, they met with five Sail of them in the Latitude of 30 Degrees North, and odd Minutes, in a most miserable Condition, without their Masts, having lost them in a Hurrican the 19th of the same Month in the Latitude 31, 30. Some Passengers from on board the Ships El Jesus Nazareno, alias La Paz, Capt. Barnarbe San Genez Commander, the Don Carlos took on board at their earnest Intreaty, nor could in Humanity deny. Captain Fennel of the S. George likewise took some from on board the Capitana, among whom is the Lady of the late President of Panama, who was lost in the Genoesa off of Jamaica. S. by the Miniſters Plenipotentiary of the Emperor, the King, the King of Spain, and the ſaid Great Duke reſpectively.

Yeſterday the Lord Biſhop of Norwich, with the Commiſſioners for building 50 new Churches, laid the firſt Stone of St. Giles's Church, having their Names and the Date of the Year and Day of the Month inſcribed thereon; after which they gave a Treat to the Workmen.

In our Regiſter of the 18th Inſtant, we gave a particular Account of the untimely End of Mrs. Braddock at Bath; it was then conjectur'd ſhe had ſtruggled for Life, and wanted to unlock the Door to ſave herſelf, becauſe her Tongue was bit through, and her Forehead was bruiſed; but we have ſince heard, that there was in her Pocket a red Girdle, with a Nooſe at one End, which was broke where the Tongue of the Buckle went in, and there were two viſible Marks on the Door, which makes it evident ſhe had firſt hanged herſelf with that Girdle, and that breaking, occaſion'd, as is ſuppos'd, the biting her Tongue and the Bruiſe on her Forehead. The following Verſes were wrote by her on her Window;

Oh Death! thou pleaſing End to human Woe!
Thou Cure for Life! thou greateſt Good below!
Still may'ſt thou fly the Coward and the Slave,
And thy ſoft Slumbers only bleſs the Brave.

Early Yeſterday Morning a Carrier, who was coming up to London out of the North, was ſet upon at Stamford-Hill by two Highwaymen, who cut off one of his Fingers, and gave him ſeveral large Wounds, but he notwithſtanding perſiſted in a reſolute Defence, and the Rogues being apprehenſive of the Approach of ſome Travellers, made off without their Booty.

On Monday laſt a Sailor fled (on a Rope) from the Top of Hackney Steeple, in leſs than half a Minute; the firſt Time he came down with a Streamer in each Hand, the ſecond with a Trumpet, and making ſome little Stops, ſounded it ſeveral Times.

On Tueſday next the reduced Officers of his Majeſty's Land Forces and Marines will begin to be paid at the Pay-Office at the Horſe-Guards, the ſix Months Half Pay, due to the 24th of June laſt.

Letters from Paris (which came by Yeſterday's Poſt) make mention, that they had by an Expreſs received Letters from Seville of the 21ſt of September, N. S. that an Order was gone to Cadiz for the Delivery of the Treaſure of the Flotilla, Azogues, and the two Regiſter-Ships from Buenos Ayres. The ſaid Juſtices order'd the Conſtables to take up ſeveral impudent Beggars, who are troubleſome to Paſſengers in the Streets, particularly a Fellow who wears a long Peruke, and ſometimes begs in Latin, and is commonly called the King of the Beggars, being often very abuſive, rude, and impudent to thoſe who give him nothing. The Juſtices ordered that a Fellow without any Features, another without a Tongue, and ſome other ſuch Objects, who have been complained of, be apprehended, in order to their being examined as to their Settlements, and paſſed to their proper Pariſhes; and ſhut up in their Workhouſes, that they may no more infeſt the Streets.

FRIDAY, October 1.

On Wedneſday laſt, Letters came from the Hon. Sir Charles Wager, dated at Bartelona the 21ſt of September, N. S. which bring Advice, that the Spaniſh Fleet was almoſt ready, they being mann'd, and having got moſt of the Forces on board for the Expedition of Don Carlos into Italy; and that in a few Days the Fleet would ſail from Barcelona. They further add, that Sir Charles Wager, with the Fleet under his Command, were all in good Health.

On Monday next the Bridgewater, belonging to the Eaſt-India Company, which lately arriv'd from the Eaſt-Indies, will be paid at their Office in Leadenhall-ſtreet.

Yeſterday began the General Quarter Seſſions of the Peace for the Royalty of the Tower of London, and the Liberties and Precincts thereof, at the new Court-Houſe on Great Tower-Hill; where a very reputable and ſubſtantial Grand Jury were ſworn; and Sir John Gonſon being in the Chair, open'd the Seſſions with a very elegant and learned Speech or Charge, for which he received both the Thanks of the Grand Jury and the Bench.

On Monday laſt, at the Horſe-Races at Bellſize, one of the Riders was flung from his Horſe, and bruiſed in ſo miſerable a Manner, that he died on the Spot.

On Wedneſday laſt ſome Fellows went to the Borough-Compter in Southwark, intending, as 'tis thought by their Behaviour, to reſcue a Priſoner there confin'd, and quarrelling with the Keeper, beat him in an outragious Manner.

Under our Tueſday's News we mentioned the South-Sea Company's Snow Don Carlos, having arrived at Fowey the 24th of Auguſt, from the Havannah, from whence ſhe came in Company with the St. George Snow, Capt. Edward Fennel; the St. George Snow having arrived at Portſmouth on Tueſday Night laſt, and the following Account being more full than the former, we therefore inſert it, viz.

On the 25th of Auguſt, in Lat. 30, we ſpoke with the San Luis, Capitana of the Galleons, in Company with three Merchant Ships, all of them without Maſts, and the San Luis's Rudder much damaged in the Head, but not ſo much damaged but the could ſteer with it, by the Help of a Tackle, and her Sides were much damaged by her Maſts falling and beating on them. The General Don Manuel Lopez Pintado made a Signal to ſpeak with us, and ſent on board a Paſſenger, with Letters for the Court of Spain. We were informed that they loſt their Maſts in a violent Hurricane on the 21ſt of Auguſt, in about the ſame Latitude: Before it began, they were all together, four Men of War and 11 Merchant Ships, but when it was over, they could ſee but eight, all which had loſt their Maſts, except one, which they believed was the San Carlos Man of War. In the Storm, the N. S. del Roſario Y S. Chriſtoval, Don Gregorio Requena, fell foul of the Almirante, and carried away her Bowſprit, and ſoon after Requena's Maſts fell on the Almirante's Stern, and beat in her Round-houſe, after which they ſaw her no more. On the 23d the ſaid Requena's Ship ſunk; her Crew got on board the N. S. del Carmen y las Animas, alias El S. Gulielmo, Don Martin Ruis Colorado, and three Perſons who had been Paſſengers in her, are come in the St. George. The General intended to go with the poor Remains of his Fleet for the Havanna or Porto Rico. They had Jury Maſts up, but very ſhort, and they made but little Way through the Water.

The Two Siſters, Captain Aſhbury Sutton, bound from Maryland to Jamaica, was lately loſt on a Reef, in Lat. 23. 20. North, occaſion'd by three Ships chaſing and firing at her under Spaniſh Colours.

On Wedneſday laſt Coutherpe Clayton, Eſq; one of his Equerries, attending the Royal Family at Stag-hunting in Fan-Grove, had the Misfortune to fall from his Horſe, and break his Collar-Bone; but it being inſtantly ſet, he is likely to recover.

It is now certain that the Duke of Lorrain will make a Tour over hither, ſome of his Royal Highneſs's Servants being already arriv'd.

Yeſterday a poor Woman dropt down dead of an Appopleſtick Fit in Cheapſide.

Robberies. On Monday laſt Mr. Dolly, a Farmer near Guilford, was attacked by two Highwaymen, on Putney-Heath, who took from him his Watch, ſix Guineas in Gold, and ſome Silver, and a Gold Ring off his Finger.——On Wedneſday in the Evening Mr. Wood, a Stay-maker in Spittle-fields, was robbed, returning from Dartmouth, on Black-heath, by three Foot-pads, who took from him upwards of 3l.

Preferment. The Rev. Mr. Thomas Ebdell, A. M. was lately preſented by the Lord Chancellor, to the Vicarage of Auſty in the County of Warwick and Dioceſe of Litchfield and Coventry.

Deaths. On Sunday laſt died, aged near 66, at his Houſe in Hull, Mr. John Thornton, a very eminent Merchant.——The ſame Day died Mr. Cole, an Upholſterer and Undertaker in New-ſtreet, Fetter-Lane.——On Wedneſday laſt died Mr. Campbell, Maſter of the General Penny Poſt-Office in Roſemary-Lane, near Tower-Hill.

FOREIGN NEWS.

PARMA, September 15. N. S. Two Days ago, a Verbal Proceſs of the Non-Exiſtence of the Ducheſs Dowager Henrietta's Pregnancy was taken in due Form, (the Phyſicians, Surgeons and Midwives having firſt made a proper Declaration upon Oath) in the Preſence of the Foreign and other Miniſters, and the Members of the principal Colleges; and Yeſterday Morning General Stampa, by the Emperor's Order, took Poſſeſſion of the Duchies of Parma and Placentia, in the Name of the Infant Don Carlos; adding, that the Inhabitants are to take an Oath of Fidelity to that Prince upon his Arrival, or to any Perſon he ſhall authorize to receive the ſame: Which Poſſeſſion was afterwards proclaimed by the Imperialiſts in the Great Market-Place, where moſt Part of the Garriſon were drawn up; and the ſaid Proclamation at the ſame Time continued all the Miniſters and Members of the Colleges in their reſpective Offices. The Pope's Miniſter thereupon poſted up in the uſual Places, a Proteſtation, ſetting forth, that the Houſe of Farneſe being now entirely extinct, the Fief of this Duchy was devolved upon the Holy See; and that therefore the Subjects muſt not pay Homage or ſwear Fealty to any but the Pope's Delegates upon pain of being ſeverely puniſh'd, &c. But thoſe Papers were immediately plucked down by the German Soldiers. The young Ducheſs Dowager, who by this pretended Great Belly, has apparently gained two Points, namely, the keeping of the Staff in her Hand for half a Year or better, and all the Opportunity ſhe could deſire to ſend away her choiceſt Moveables to Modena, is now following them herſelf, bidding an everlaſting Adieu to Parma; her Highneſs being gone this Day to Colorno, on her Way to Modena. The French Envoy is ſet out for his former Poſt at the Court of Tuſcany, without taking Leave of any Perſon here, which is not very conſiſtent with the Character of his Nation for Politeneſs.
